Expert Warns On Gap Between Funds And Human Needs; U.J.A. Increases Budget By $4.4 Million To Set 1965 Goal At $109 Million

The United Jewish Appeal set a 1965 goal for $109.4 million — an increase of $4.4 million over last year's goal — to meet the needs of 725,000 Jewish men, women and children in 29 countries, with particular emphasis on Israel, says the New York Times. The action was taken by 2,400 delegates from various parts of the U.S. at the closing session of the Appeal's 27th annual national conference at the New York Hilton Hotel.

At the same time the delegates unanimously elected Max M. Fisher, of Detroit, a petroleum industry executive, as general chairman. Mr. Fisher is widely known for his leadership in Jewish philanthropic activities and is a principal adviser to the Israeli Government on the refining and petro-chemical industry.

He succeeds Joseph Meyerhoff, of Baltimore, Maryland, who had served for four years.

The Appeal seeks $71 million for its continuing global programs of aid to refugees and needy Jews and $38.4 million as a special fund to meet the special costs of immigration, resettlement, and absorption programs in Israel and related needs.

Leaders of the Appeal pointed out that the 1965 goal reflects the increased needs of the Appeal's principal agencies — the Jewish Agency for Israel and the Joint Distribution Committee.

[illegible] submitted by the Jewish Agency are based on the expectation that about the same number of immigrants will arrive in Israel next year as did this year, says the New York Times. Between 1961 and 1964, 250,000 Jewish immigrants, nearly all destitute, entered Israel, according to Rabbi Herbert A. Friedman, executive vice chairman of the Appeal.

The Joint Distribution Committee budget of $28,853,500 is the minimum, according to officials, that the agency required to carry on relief, welfare, and rehabilitation services for 465,000 needy Jews in North Africa, Europe, and elsewhere. The Committee's heaviest commitments are in France, where 55,000 Jewish refugees from North African countries need assistance.

Rabbi Friedman told the delegates that the "cost of freedom continues to go up," adding that "the road which brings the new immigrant from his country of origin to Israel — including all way-station en route, and the services which must be provided for him — will be more expensive in 1965 than in 1964."

The Appeal's other beneficiaries are the New York Association for New Americans, which assists Jewish refugees in the United States, and the United Hias Service, worldwide Jewish migration agency, which provides for the resettlement of Jewish refugees to countries other than Israel.

American Jewish leaders were told that increasing needs of Jews over the world, combined with the end of German reparations, will create a "dangerous gap" next year in aid programs conducted by the Joint Distribution Committee.

The warning was given by Moses A. Leavitt, executive vice chairman of the Committee, at the opening session of the national conference of the United Jewish Appeal at the New York Hilton Hotel, says the New York Times. The agency is a major beneficiary of the Appeal's fund-raising campaigns.

The increased needs, various speakers told the 2,000 delegates, resulted from the influx of immigrants into Israel, including a large number of aged and handicapped. In addition, there has been a heavy flow of refugees into France from former French territories in North Africa.

Mr. Leavitt said the Committee would require a budget of $28,853,500 to meet the minimum needs of an estimated 465,500 refugee or needy Jews in thirty countries and to fulfil special programs in Israel.

He noted that the organization next year would no longer receive grants from the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany.

Under a 1964 agreement between the Bonn Government and the Conference on Jewish Material Claims for $107 million, the Joint Distribution Committee has been receiving $7 million annually. The remainder of the reparations money has been used by other Jewish groups.

The $7 million received annually by the Committee has helped maintain welfare, rehabilitation, cultural, and religious programs for victims of Nazi persecution.

Mr. Leavitt said the discontinuation of the fund would "create a dangerous gap between the funds available and the human needs to be met."

Charles H. Jordan, director-general of the J.D.C. Overseas Operations, said the departure of 300,000 Jewish refugees over the last three years "has not appreciably lessened problems in the lands they left."

On the other hand, he said, it "has intensified problems in Israel, which has taken in the bulk

Leaders Disagree On Best Approach To Soviet On Jewish Plight

Two Jewish leaders disagreed on what methods should be used in calling attention to the plight of Jews in the Soviet Union. The difference of opinion came at a concluding session of the 66th national biennial convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America at the Shoreham Hotel, in Washington.

Rabbi Bernard Poupko of Pittsburgh, who is prominent in American Orthodoxy, called on leaders of all faiths throughout the world to appeal to the Soviet authorities, says the New York Times, "in a spirit of petition and request rather than protest and criticism to remove political, social, and economic barriers which alienate Jewish citizens from their heritage."

"Having been in Russia and being somewhat aware of the Communist mood and attitude, I question the usefulness and wisdom of conferences or protest demonstrations," Rabbi Poupko said.

Dr. Eric Goldhagen, lecturer in Soviet politics at Hunter College in New York, criticized those who, "in good faith," favor the removal of the problem from the public view.

"Whatever has so far been achieved in easing the plight of Soviet Jewry [illegible] has been achieved only because of pressure from abroad."

There are about three million Jews in the Soviet Union.

Dr. Goldhagen contended that "silent diplomacy would be of no avail if it were not backed by pressure from all parts of the world to which the Soviet leaders react.

"Those who believe that the Soviet leaders will yield to silent pleas expressed in the privacy of conference rooms are mistaken," he added. "Their belief rests on a misconception of the nature of the Soviet leadership."

The delegates voted for the establishment of a National Organization of Orthodox Synagogue Administrators. The major aims of the new organization, says the New York Times, are to "set specific standards and to formulate professional ideals and practices" for Orthodox synagogue administrators throughout the country.

Trial Group Visiting Auschwitz Camp Site Finds Utter Desolation And Despair Still Cling, With Shattering Effect

A group of twenty-two people taking part in the Auschwitz trial at Frankfurt, including one of the defendants, visited the site of the concentration camp near Cracow in southern Poland on December 14. They observed a minute's silence for the camp's four million victims before the notorious "Black Wall" where more than 10,000 men, women, and children were shot down at close range by the S.S., says the London Times. All the members of the party were visibly moved by the occasion, especially the former S.S. camp doctor, Dr. Franz Bernhard Lucas, the only one of the five defendants still on bail who accepted the invitation to revisit the site.

The leader of the group is Judge Claus Hotz, who thus becomes the first West German Judge to carry out an official judicial inspection behind the Iron Curtain. The others were three public prosecutors, the representative of several plaintiffs in East Germany and Eastern Europe, as well as most of the defence counsel. The leading defence counsel, Dr. Laternser, was not present: he argued that it was illegal for the Federal Republic to conduct judicial activities on foreign soil.

The amount of documentation and eyewitness accounts could convey the impression of utter desolation and despair which still clings to the huge complex of Auschwitz and Birkenau. That, as a Frankfurt state prosecutor dealing with [illegible] told the London Times reporter, would justify the [illegible]

It is also charged with finding out the answers to quite precise questions, on which hangs the validity of a number of eye-witness accounts in the trial so far, for instance, whether from Block 28 it was possible for anyone to see an inmate being shot at the "black wall", and similar prosaic matters of fact.

At the main Auschwitz base camp all the buildings, which are of stone and concrete, and which before the First World War were used as barracks by an Austro-Hungarian regiment of dragoons, have been preserved, and the entire area turned into a museum. The double barbed-wire electrified fence is still there, against which countless inmates sought relief from their slow agony.

At the Birkenau camp, upon which the delegation concentrated, it inspected the ramp where the countless transports of prisoners from all over Europe arrived, and where they were sorted out arbitrarily into those destined immediately for the gas chambers, and those from whom some work could still be extracted before they were killed. The crematoria were blown up by the S.S. before the camp was evacu[illegible] in 1940.

The foundations, and some of the gas chambers remain, however, and are sufficiently shattering to give an accurate picture of the appalling conditions at the time. The wooden barracks, in which the inmates were housed, have largely disappeared, but their foundations can still be clearly traced, says the London Times. The court delegation took exact measurements and photographs of all the various installations.

The first state prosecutor in the Auschwitz case, Dr. Hans Grossmann, said at a press conference that the inspection of the site was indispensable for the trial. The overall impression of the camp had been utterly shattering both for him and other prosecutors, although they had been delving for years into the records of the monstrous [illegible]

The departure of the group was delayed by fog several hours, and the special aircraft taking it to Vienna had to leave from Stuttgart instead of Frankfurt. It was not possible for it to travel overland through Czechoslovakia to Auschwitz because the Polish Government were to issue visas only in Warsaw. About 200 to 300 correspondents also obtained visas direct from the Polish authorities, without any difficulties, in order to accompany the delegation.

The viewing of the former concentration camp arose through an application to the court in Frankfurt-trial by one of the assistant prosecutors, Henry Ormond, at the beginning of July. The court decided to deliberate upon this, while expressing the opinion that there might be legal difficulties.

On October 23, the court decided to send an official delegation to view Auschwitz, once the Polish Ministry of Justice had given its consent. After prolonged negotiation between the Ministry of Justice in Stuttgart, the Bonn Foreign Ministry, and the Polish authorities, the journey was finally arranged, says the London Times, and the Polish Government assured all members of the group of a safe conduct.

Tribuna Ludu, in a comment under the title, "The Silent Witness", deplored that the whole court in the Auschwitz trial had not transported itself to the concentration camp, although the Government would have been ready to approve this.

"But it is also good that only a part inspection of Auschwitz is taking place", it added. On the scene of the untold crimes, where the soil could not be turned over human remains, the representatives of the court, of the prosecution and the defence, would find confirmation of many eye witnesses' accounts.

Former Montrealer To Direct N.Y. Research Center Of Catholics, Jews

Establishment of a joint Catholic-Jewish research center in Rome to examine the roots of religious prejudice throughout the world was announced in Miami, Florida, by the American Jewish Committee's national board.

The new institute will be named the Leonard M. Sperry Center for Intergroup Cooperation, in honor of the late Los Angeles member of the American Jewish Committee.

It will be situated in the International University for Social studies, Pro Deo, under the direction of an American social psychologist, Dr. Otto Klineberg, formerly of Columbia University; and an Italian anthropologist, Prof. Tullo Tentori.

The recent declaration of the Vatican (Ecumenical) Council, lifting from the Jews the responsibility for the death of Jesus, was described as aiding the new efforts to combat prejudice, says the New York Herald Tribune. Textbooks and other teaching materials used throughout the world will be examined and a new program of education will work toward eliminating prejudice in all countries.

Ralph Friedman, chairman of the Committee's executive board, had a private audience with Pope Paul VI last May in which, he reported, the Pontiff indicated his approval of the project.

Sees [illegible]evel Interfa[illegible] marriages Due To Religious Illiteracy

The program director of the Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation said at Long Beach, Long Island, N.Y., that thousands of young Jews have become prone to enter interfaith marriages at the college level because of their own religious illiteracy and a failure in their early Jewish education, says the New York Herald Tribune. Dr. Alfred Jospe, director of program and resources for the nationwide college campus Jewish youth organization, told a Special Conference on Intermarriage, called by the Commission on Synagogue Relations of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies:

"[illegible] of send[illegible] our universities every years [illegible] 'pediatric Judaism,' with religious notions which were arrested on the eighth or ninth-grade level of intellectual development, but with scholastic records which permit them to matriculate in an institution of higher learning.

"It is this kind of naive religious notion that evaporates under the pressure of mature intellectual challenge on the college level. Many students feel unable to retain their childhood religion without doing violence to their intellectual integrity."

Dr. Jospe urged fifty high-ranking scholars, rabbis, social workers, and educators at the Promenade Hotel to examine the interfaith marriage problem. There is, he said, a "shattering" amount of Jewish religious ignorance at the college level.

This, he continued, was "perhaps the most significant single factor" affecting a widespread readiness by young Jews to approve all forms of intermarriage except racial, says the New York Herald Tribune. Thirty or forty years ago, young Jews on college campuses were said to be "in flight" from an uncomfortable minority Jewish status, and "intermarriage was one of the avenues of escape from the penalties of Jewish identity."

Today's Jewish students, who are second-, third- and even fourth-generation Americans, affirm their Jewishness "without noticeable embarrassment or self-consciousness." Being Jewish is "neither a problem nor a challenge" for them. "It is simply a condition of their lives," he said.

It is also a factor entering into recent claims, notably by Dr. Erich Rosenthal in the 1963 American Jewish Yearbook, that "in the third generation, college attendance seems to double the intermarriage rate" among native-born Jewish children of native-born parents.

Dr. Jospe enumerated his own "reservations" about the Rosenthal findings which, he noted, have caused a "severe shock" in the Jewish community and aroused the suspicion that a university is a "faith trap" which will eventually cause Jewish life to vanish.

He conceded that the Rosenthal study had dramatically focused attention on the correlation between intermarriage and college life. It also pointed up the failure of Jewish education "to communicate an image of Jewish identity", says the New York Herald Tribune, to young Jews in search of the spiritual meaning of life, he observed.

of the refugees, and has produced new problems in other countries of refuge, particularly in France," reports the New York Times. Mr. Jordan said that successive waves of immigration from North Africa, starting in 1956, had "exploded" France's Jewish population from 300,000 to more than 500,000.

Herbert Katzki, the assistant director-general, reported that the J.D.C. was aiding each month an average of 90,000 Jews in Europe, nearly 55,000 of them in France. He said that the local Jewish welfare agencies in France could not cope with the problem alone.

HOW TO ORDER ISRAELI WINES

Some of Israel's wines have been known here in Canada for several years. This season, another Israel wine well-liked in many countries, now for the first time has become available in Quebec liquor stores. It is the Carmel Hock, a dry white wine, widely praised by connoisseurs, and one in which Israel can take pride.

Persons interested in certain types of wine have sometimes reported difficulty in obtaining them, as the Israeli wines they asked for were not carried or listed in the store at which they applied. The fact should be known that any wine can be ordered by its code number. (This is particularly necessary with a newly-carried wine such as the Carmel Hock, the code number of which is 1949.) Any liquor store is then obliged to supply the demand within a short time. When orders are placed for Israeli wine, the names and the code numbers should be used for prompter supply. Meir Livnat is Consul and Trade Commissioner in Montreal.

TRIAL GROUP VISITING AUSCHWITZ CAMP

The only question really is whether, within the three days set aside for the inspection, there would be any time for any detailed examination of documentary evidence.

The reason why the whole court, in fact, did not transport itself to Auschwitz is that this might have raised just the legal difficulties which the defence mentioned, quite apart from the fact that the conveyance of 15 accused under arrest would have raised serious physical obstacles. It appears that under German criminal procedure, those accused free on bail could not be compelled in any case to take part in the journey.

Why Franz Lucas chose to go back to the camp, for the first time for twenty years, is a matter for conjecture. At recent sessions of the trial, a number of witnesses gave evidence to his good character, and to the fact that they owed him their lives, and that without his intervention many thousands who survived would have died, says the London Times. Perhaps by travelling to Auschwitz, he wished to emphasize that he was not afraid of being confronted with the scene of his activities two decades ago.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

study in or from any religious book or to join in any exercise of devotion or religion when it is objected to in writing by his or her parent or guardian".

Another recommendation of the Royal Commission was that "in each high school a system of electives be set up assuring a very liberal choice between the study of Greek, Latin, and at least two modern languages apart from French and English" and that "as elective courses in modern languages, Spanish, German, Italian, Russian, Hebrew, Arabic, Chinese, and Japanese, or any other language in which a school can justify instruction, be authorized".

The Commission's report indicated that "the socio-economic situation was probably the reason most new Canadians chose English". The report said "Jewish, German, and Polish immigrants nearly always chose English, while only Italians seemed to prefer French, although 20,000 Italian children were in Anglo-Catholic schools in Montreal. Did immigrants choose English because they might go to other parts of Canada, or to the United States, did English appear necessary for success, or did 'the very marked confessional character of French-language Catholic schools' put them off?"

As indicated in press reports, the recommendations of the Commission "are directed to the province's public schools. But private schools will be likely to follow many of the proposed programs of study in order to prepare their students for the institutes and, eventually, for university".

The final report of the Royal Commission is expected in January. It is to concern itself with finances, school commissions, and denominational questions.

LONG-HIDDEN, PRICELESS TREASURY OF WORKS

Stressing that any assessment at this stage could only be conjectural, Mr. Schmelczer explained that scholars were especially interested in this literature because some of it was written by the first generation of Jews to make their home in North African communities after the Expulsion from the Iberian peninsula, and it thus covers an important period of cultural transition.

The Spanish and Portuguese refugees, immersed in a tradition of scholarship and culture developed under centuries of liberal Moorish government, could not but have exercised a beneficent influence upon the North African communities. These communities in which the Jews lived under constant harsh restrictions, had consequently lagged behind in their cultural development.

The newcomers, most of whom reached the new lands economically impoverished, forced to leave behind their material possessions, brought them cultural enrichment. Through these newcomers the North African Jews were introduced to European culture, science and art, commerce and industry.

The works written by the refugees and by their descendants retained distinct characteristics. It is these features that scholars are most anxious to study in relation to the gradual convergence of the two cultures. The vast range of subject matter found in the archives indicates how widely the Sephardi spirit of intellectual inquiry ranged. The collection contains works as divergent as scientific theses on astronomy, astrological formulae, and information on divining the future through study of natural phenomena, calendar calculations, and Kabbalistic treatises. As well as these, there is much material on biblical exegesis, Talmudical commentaries, rabbinical letters and responsa, legal and liturgical writings, commentaries on Passover Haggadah, and grammatical works.

Most of these writings, both in manuscript and printed form, are in Hebrew, but there are also works written in Arabic and in Ladino, the every-day language used by many Sephardi Jews, a dialect composed of a mixture of Spanish and Hebrew. Some of the manuscripts and most of the books bear dates, and it is of interest to observe the gradual change in the calligraphy from the square-shaped Spanish style writing to the Arabic characteristics of the later writings.

The North African documents join what is the largest collection of Hebraica and Judaica ever to be assembled in one place. With over 10,000 manuscripts and some 200,000 printed volumes, the Library of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America draws scholars and students from every corner of the globe. In its vast archives is material indispensable to any study of Jewish history, philosophy and religion, most of it equally indispensable to any general study of science, medicine, and mathematics.

This constant original research by creative scholars from all over the world at the Seminary Library dramatizes the unique position that the institution holds in the community as one of the most powerful instruments for the promulgation of knowledge and understanding among men.

Long-Hidden, Priceless Treasury Of Works Of N.A. Scholars, Is Acquired For Study In N.Y. Seminary Archives, Still In Crates

A lost treasury of original manuscripts, works of North African Jewish scholars representing the fruits of Jewish learning from the sixteenth century up to these days, has come to light in New York. Consisting of some 2,150 manuscripts and early printed works this literature, which is now being studied in the Library of The Jewish Theological Seminary of America, in New York, was formerly owned by North African Jews whose ancestors had fled from Spain in 1492, when the orders for Jewish expulsion were promulgated.

Representing to their owners a spiritual link with their rich cultural history, these writings were regarded by the North African Jews as a sacred heritage. The documents, which range in subject from rabbinic thought to secular and scientific records, were secretly preserved by the communities for hundreds of years. Many were retained in the same family line and passed on from generation to generation.

Efforts to trace and acquire these archives for scholarship were finally successful and have resulted in the deposit of this literature in the Seminary Library, where, for the first time, it has become available for detailed examination by scholars. Such is the significance attached to this material that it may involve several years of study before a complete critical assessment can be published.

"The acquisition of this material on a field where a paucity of data exists, is of major importance to scholarship," stated Menahem Schmelczer, Associate Librarian of the Seminary, announcing the news of the acquisition. The information will enable historians to fill in gaps in the records of the cultural development of Jewish communities in every age throughout the world. This is the aim of the Seminary Library where scholars have built up the most extensive such records in existence.

"It is today the urgent duty of Jewish scholarship in the Western world to undertake a study of the North African contribution to Hebraic learning" stressed Mr. Schmelczer. "The disintegration of the North African communities in their homelands, where they lived for many centuries, and the end of their cultural activities in their original setting, are forcible reminders that we must not delay. Bearers of the tradition are disappearing and the written material becomes scarcer. Under these circumstances the acquisition of these valuable documents is regarded as an event of great significance."

Progress of the research is hampered by the condition of much of the material, some of it dating back to the sixteenth century. While a few of the centuries-old manuscripts and books are as clear and fresh-looking as if their authors had just laid aside the quill, in others dust and bookworms have devastated pages to a fine filigree. And these damaged works will have to be carefully reconstructed by expert craftsmen before their secrets can be unravelled by the scholars.

There are approximately 150 manuscripts and 2,000 printed books in varying conditions of preservation in this long-hidden treasury awaiting the scholar's eye. Most of these precious works, still to be unpacked, are in large crates, piled up in the Seminary's Library Tower, a familiar landmark over Morningside Heights.

The collection was assembled over long years by a well-known North African Jewish scholar who devoted his entire life to a study of the communities of North Africa and of Moroccan Jewry in particular. A dedicated collector, he spared no efforts in his zeal to rescue records of the literary activities of his ancestors and in consequence accumulated one of the most valuable known collections in this field.

"One Of Most Burning Issues Facing Orthodoxy" Coming Up At Conference Of Rabbis

The annual mid-winter conference of the Igud Harabonim, the Rabbinical Alliance of America, will be held on December 29 at the Bretton Hall Hotel, in New York. The president is Rabbi Dr. Abraham B. Hecht; chairmen of the conference, Rabbi Lewis Brenner, of Passaic, N. J.; and Rabbi Ralph Pelcowitz, of Far Rockaway, N. Y.; on the committee are: Rabbis I. Belitsky, M. Galinsky, L. Machlis, F. Wolf.

An afternoon session will be dedicated to one of the most burning issues facing Orthodoxy in America, says the announcement, "The Question Of Orthodox Participation In Mixed Boards, Councils, And Similar Organizations With Conservative And Reform Rabbis And Congregational Groups." This issue was brought to the forefront of Jewish discussion recently at the biennial convention of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, held in Washington, D. C. This session will be preceded by an executive session which will be closed to the public. The new Secretary of Igud, Rabbi Meyer Bluth, will present a comprehensive report on his activities.

Rabbi Meyer Greenberg, Chief Rabbi of Paterson, N. J., and immediate ex-president of the Igud, will be presented with a plaque in recognition of two years' of devoted and outstanding service to the Igud. The night session will be dedicated entirely to the Igud's new project in Eretz, Israel. "The Yeshiva Shaalavim", on the Jordanian border. Rabbi Shmuel Schecter, member of the faculty of the Yeshiva, and its official representative, will return shortly to Israel. Rabbi Joseph Kahanaman will speak.

C.J.C. REQUESTS REPEAL OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR PROSECUTION OF WAR CRIMINALS IN GERMANY

Michael Garber, Q.C., President of the Canadian Jewish Congress, sent a telegram to the Ambassador of Germany in Ottawa, H. E. Kurt Oppler, referring to Germany's refusal to repeal the present Statute of Limitations for war crimes prosecution and asking the Ambassador to convey to the German Government "the great anxiety of the Jewish community of Canada over this attitude of German Government and its fear that it may be a significant step towards revival of Nazism".

The telegram further said that "no immunity should be granted to those responsible for the greatest crime in the annals of history the extermination of millions of people including six millions of Jews and it is an offense against any concept of morality to permit freedom for those who for some reasons may not be apprehended by the time the Statute of Limitations goes into effect. Such an immunity for war criminals could only serve to minimize the unique and monstrous nature of war crimes".

The telegram expressed the hope that "the German Government will see fit to revoke the Statute of Limitations".

In the absence of the Ambassador, who is at present in Germany, the communication was acknowledged in a telegram signed by the Charge d'Affaires. It stated: "I would like to inform you that I have not failed to pass on your communication to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Bonn and I have asked them to look into the matter".

Recommendations Of Royal Commission Of Inquiry Into Education In Quebec On Religious Education And Elective Courses In Modern Languages

The report of the Quebec Royal Commission on Education (third volume), released December 11, also dealt with religious instruction in elementary and secondary schools, including references to the special position of Jewish children within the framework of the Protestant schools.

The Royal Commission on Education recommended that "religious instruction in elementary and secondary schools consist of at least two hours a week" and that "there be no elementary examinations in religious instruction and that they be given in high schools only if the marks are not added to the scholastic results".

The Commission also recommended that "in so far as the class teachers will be charged with giving religious instruction at the elementary level, all those who indicate an insufficiency of religious conviction be excused from giving this instruction" and that "future teachers be accustomed to undertake their responsibility in regard to the moral training of children and adolescents first in the form of intellectual integrity and a sense of collective responsibility".

The report said that "one of the blunders of our system has without doubt been to gorge the child with religious theory, to fill his day with routine practices. We believe that two hours of religious education weekly is sufficient".

Dealing with religious instruction in Protestant schools, which are also attended by Jewish children in Montreal, the report said (as indicated in the Montreal Star, December 12):

"In the Protestant schools of Quebec the teaching of religion is not doctrinal, but based on commented readings of the Bible. The teacher must therefore make a clear distinction between the facts and his own comments, however well informed they may be.

"However, the commission says, one must be aware that in Montreal alone, out of 63,194 pupils in Protestant schools, 17,725 are Jewish and that 20 per cent of the teaching body is also Jewish.

"Efforts have been made to base the teaching of religion on the Old Testament and on a few chosen sections of the New Testament which would not be offensive to Jews. But it often happens, the report says, that Jewish teachers will instruct religion to classrooms of Protestant pupils, and it will also happen that Protestant teachers will forget that they have some Jewish students in their classes and they might not qualify their comments accordingly.

"Protestants, like Catholics, appear to hope that the teaching of religion be turned over to specialists who would be fully aware of the problems which may arise.

"The obligation for Jewish parents to give their children a religious background is a fundamental precept of their religion. The family, the synagogue, and special Hebrew schools are used for this purpose.

"Many members of the Jewish faith also want to know the Christian tradition because it is so fundamental to an understanding of Western civilization.

"There may even be extreme and paradoxical occasions under the present system where a Jewish teacher will teach about Christ to mostly Jewish students.

"A basic comparative study of religion may well be the answer to these problems, the commission suggests".

At present the regulations governing religious instruction in Protestant schools stipulate that "Protestant schools will be opened each day with the Lord's Prayer and the reading of the Holy Scriptures" and that "in the elementary grades in Protestant schools the first twenty minutes of each day shall be devoted to moral and religious instruction according to the Course of Study as prescribed. No denominational teaching shall be given in such schools . . . No pupil in any public school, however, shall be required to read or
